He famously cheated on Sienna Miller with his children's nanny in 2005.

But it seems all has been forgiven as Jude Law posed for friendly photograph with his former fiancee's mother at a charity event.

The 41-year-old actor and Josephine Miller were spotted greeting each other at they attended the African Solutions to African problems (ASAP) lunch at the Louise T Blouin Foundation on Wednesday.

The organisation, ASAP, is working through a 6-year Model that develops and strengthens informal groups into mature community-based organizations of women, capable of giving comprehensive care to the vulnerable children within their communities.
Since 2003 ASAP has contributed to about 700 women caring for over 15,000 children with nutrition and broad-based care, with access to education, health services and social welfare throughout South Africa.

Jude and Sienna's failed relationship hits the news once again earlier this year after it was claimed that Jude asked the News Of The World to "back-date" Sienna's rumoured affair with Daniel Craig so it would appear that she cheated on him before he betrayed her.

The actor's publicist was quoted to have told the reporter: 'That's the thing he [Law] wants the most'.

Meanwhile Miss Miller, 32, insisted she had never sought to manipulate Press attention and complained she had been vilified over the alleged affair.

Giving evidence to the phone-hacking trial by video link, the actress sought to play down her fling with the James Bond star, saying it was a ‘very brief encounter’.

And relations were not always so cordial between Sienna and her mother after Sienna admitted that at one time she suspected Josephine, a 70-year-old former model, actress and yoga teacher, sold stories about her to the Press.

However all parties have managed to move on as Sienna is now engaged to actor Tom Sturridge with whom she has a 22-month old daughter, Marlowe.
